Culture shock is the impact of moving from a familiar culture to an unaccustomed one, which many travelers experience. It is very common, and symptoms vary from person to person. Factors that can cause culture shock include climate, language, food, values, dress and behavior and no two cases are exactly the same. Generally speaking, there are five stages of culture shock experienced by travelers. The preliminary stage begins with preparing for the change and learning the etiquette and cultures you will be presented with. This is usually followed by euphoria on arrival, which can wear off, moving on to the next phase: irritability. This surfaces as you try to cope with simple aspects of life that can suddenly seem foreign. The next stage begins as gradual adjustments are made, with cultures becoming familiar and everyday life starts to fall into place, as you adapt to the new culture. The final stage is coming home. For some, this can have the biggest impact, as the realization dawns that you have adapted to a new way of living. Old values still remain with you while new experiences change your approach and views on things.

29. We can understand from the passage that ----.

- A) euphoria on arrival and irritability are the two stages of culture shock followed by preparing for the change
- B) the effects of culture shock on individuals are uniform no matter which culture they belong to
- C) climate, language and food are more likely to cause culture shock than dress codes
- D) even after you come back home, you are still likely to be exposed to the effects of culture shock
- E) the more you adapt to the new culture, the more severe the effects of culture shock will be

30. The main purpose of the passage is to inform the readers about ----.

- A) how one can recover from culture shock
- B) the causes and the course of culture shock
- C) what can be done to avoid culture shock
- D) how one can adapt to a new culture
- E) the effects of climate on culture shock

31. It is clear from the passage that as you adjust yourself to a new culture ----.

- A) you begin to miss your home less
- B) you can feel yourself ready to return home
- C) old values start to disappear altogether
- D) everyday life begins to seem meaningless
- E) the routine of life there starts to make sense

The Sedona Method is perhaps best thought of as a form of New Age psychotherapy designed to free the individual from emotional baggage. It was created by an American named Lester Levenson. His story has a slightly melodramatic feel, which may make some suspicious. In 1952, Levenson, a 46-year-old from New Jersey, had a severe heart attack that nearly killed him. His doctors could offer no help, and he was sent home to die. With nothing to do except lie in bed and stare out of the window, Levenson began thinking over the various philosophies and therapies he had encountered during his life and concluded that none would help him now. Looking for a way out of his emotional and physical pain, he considered those moments in which he had felt most happy and realized that they all involved a loving focus on someone other than himself. He entered deeply into this selfless state and released all negative feelings. In 1990, four years before his death, Levenson claimed never to have visited a doctor again. In 1994, he died of cancer, though, according to some, he was free of pain and fear throughout the illness.

32. According to the passage, Levenson ----.

- A) suffered from cancer for four years between 1990 and 1994
- B) did not take any medical help from any physician after he was sent home to die in 1952
- C) was free of pain throughout his illness between 1990 and 1994 thanks to the medications he took
- D) would have died of a heart attack if he had not been taken to hospital immediately
- E) made an extensive study on The Sedona Method before his heart attack in 1952

33. We can understand from the passage that the Sedona Method ----.

- A) played an important role in the introduction of New Age psychotherapy
- B) was created by Lester Levenson almost as soon as he suffered from a heart attack
- C) is aimed at helping the patient get rid of emotional burden
- D) was practised by physicians to free Levenson from his emotional pain
- E) has been proven to be beneficial to cardiopathy but not to cancer patients

34. We can infer from the passage that ----.

- A) not everyone thinks that Levenson experienced no pain or fear when he suffered from cancer
- B) Levenson would have been saved if he had applied to a doctor instead of relying on the Sedona Method
- C) Levenson didn't go through many therapies before his heart attack in 1952
- D) Levenson was the sort of person who never loved anyone else other than himself
- E) doctors discharged Levenson from the hospital because they thought it would be better for him to take special care at home

Bill Gates is known for his polio eradication efforts especially in the Third World countries since the early 2000s. He has been providing funding for vaccination campaigns and research in developing regions where polio still remains a threat. In fact, the polio threat had already been eliminated in the Western World by the 1980s. However, the condition unfortunately prevails in many Third World countries due to the lack of hygiene and sanitation. His efforts have resulted in a substantial decrease in the number of polio cases around the world. Bill Gates' devotion to eradicating polio through using his wealth influence serves as a good indication of how one person can make a deep impact on global health issues.

Sea level in the Chesapeake Bay rises at a faster rate than average because the land underneath the bay is sinking. During the last ice age, glaciers pushed the land surrounding the Bay upward. After the glaciers had melted, the land slowly retreated to its original position through a process called land subsidence. As the land sinks, the water in the Bay rises. Land subsidence contributes to about half of the Chesapeake region's observed sea level rise. Melting ice causes the remainder. Since so much of the land in the Chesapeake region already lies very near sea level, even a small rise would have a huge impact. It could destroy the wetland habitats of many birds, fish, shellfish and plants. Human populations and structures are also at risk. In many low-lying areas, farms and homes will have to be relocated as the bay floods the land. Roads, bridges and buildings will need to be removed and restructured, as will sewage, draining and other utility systems. As the sea creeps inland, rebuilding the infrastructure of major metropolitan areas such as Baltimore will be an extremely costly endeavor.

38. It can be understood from the passage that land subsidence ----.

- A) causes all the sea level rise in the Chesapeake Bay
- B) is the lowering of the land-surface elevation
- C) was a frequent occurrence during the last ice age
- D) was the reason for the melting of glaciers
- E) is an event limited to the Chesapeake Bay

39. It is clear from the passage that ----.

- A) roads, bridges and buildings near the Chesapeake Bay have already been flooded due to the rise in sea level
- B) human populations and structures are unlikely to be damaged by a rise in sea level in the Chesapeake Bay
- C) Baltimore is among the places that could be adversely affected by the sea level rise in the Chesapeake Bay
- D) sewage, draining and other utility systems are strong enough to withstand any flooding due to sea level rise
- E) birds and fish are much more vulnerable to the negative effects of the rise in sea level than plants

40. The passage is mainly about ----.

- A) the importance of the Chesapeake Bay in the world economy
- B) the types of fish, birds and plants peculiar to the Chesapeake Bay
- C) the destruction caused by the rise in sea levels around the world
- D) the sea level rise in the Chesapeake Bay and its likely consequences
- E) the observed changes in climate during the last ice age

Agricultural methods often vary widely around the world, depending on climate, terrain, traditions, and available technology. Low-technology farming involves permanent crops. They are food grown on land that is not replanted after each harvest. Citrus trees and coffee plants are examples of permanent crops. Higher-technology farming involves crop rotation. It requires knowledge of farmable land. Scholars and engineers not only use crop rotation and irrigation, but plant crops according to the season, type of soil, and amount of water needed. In coastal West Africa, farmers, usually women, plant corn soon after the first rains of the growing season. They often use an ancient method of clearing called slash-and-burn. First, the farmer cuts all the brush in her plot. When this vegetation dries, she sets fire to it. The heat from the fire makes the soil easy to turn, and the burned vegetation fertilizes it. The farmer then spreads kernels of corn that are saved from the previous year's harvest.

41. According to the passage, citrus trees ----.

- A) are examples of higher-technology farming
- B) are usually planted after the first rains of the growing season
- C) need a variety of nutrients to grow strong and healthy
- D) do not need to be planted again and again after each harvest
- E) do not produce much fruit in drought conditions

42. It is clear from the passage that ----.

- A) farmers in coastal West Africa are not engaged in low-technology farming
- B) scholars and engineers avoid using crop rotation and irrigation
- C) slash-and-burn is a method that has existed for a long time
- D) the amount of water needed is not important in higher-technology farming
- E) the soil becomes too hard to turn when the vegetation on it is burnt

43. In order to make the soil more fertile farmers in coastal West Africa ----.

- A) burn the vegetation on it
- B) spread kernels of corn on it
- C) water it more frequently
- D) make use of crop rotation
- E) have developed a new method
